

Ropes & Gray

A $3.7 billion firm that refused to be full-service. What it actually does, how it makes money, what genuinely sets it apart – and why it is a relationship business before it is a law firm.

-
- | | |
|----|--|
| 01 | It does not win deals. It wins sponsors – then earns from one relationship for a decade, across five practice groups. |
|----|--|
-
- | | |
|----|--|
| 02 | It is top-tier on both sides of a wall most firms only stand on one side of: private funds and registered funds. The wall is coming down. |
|----|--|
-
- | | |
|----|---|
| 03 | It hired a client's general counsel; a former head of its London office left to join a client. Adviser and client are one talent pool. |
|----|---|
-

HOW TO USE THIS

Contents

Pages 3–9 are what the firm is. Pages 10–13 are the part that will actually differentiate your application. Pages 15–16 are what you send and say.

01	The firm at a glance — origins, scale, and the strategic choice	3
02	Structure — governance above a matrix	4
03	The money engine — how the firm actually makes money	5
04	Revenue — what is reported, and what is not	6
05	Specialisms — where they are genuinely first-rank	7
06	On the tape — work you can point to	8
07	The asset management angle — the convergence argument	9
08	What makes it stand out — six differentiators, ranked	10
09	The relationship business — why this is the real model	11
10	The evidence — how you can prove the relationship claim	12
11	Client-facing: a reality check — what it looks like as a trainee	13
12	Recent moves and strategy — what they did and why	14
13	Your application — two drafted answers	15
14	On the day — questions, and how to follow up	16
15	Sources and caveats	17

IF YOU REMEMBER FOUR SENTENCES

Ropes chose depth over breadth: private capital and life sciences, nothing else at full strength. Its revenue comes from owning sponsor relationships, not winning individual deals — one sponsor bills across five practice groups for a decade. It is uniquely positioned on both sides of the private/registered fund divide just as that divide dissolves. And it is expanding into Europe not to plant flags, but because its clients are deploying there and referrals leak relationships.

SECTION 01

A vertical firm, not a full-service one

$3.7bn Global revenue, FY2025 +9.4% YoY · £2.7bn	$7.04m Profit per equity partner ≈ £5.2m	$2.5m Revenue per lawyer +8.3% YoY
~1,500 Lawyers globally ~300 partners	16 Offices in 10 countries London since 2010	15 London training contracts a year NQ £170k

Ropes & Gray began in Boston in 1865 and spent most of its life as a well-regarded regional firm with one unusual asset: it was counsel to the fund complexes that grew up around Boston's money-management industry. That accident of geography became the strategy.

The firm never tried to become a global generalist. It made a narrower bet – own the private capital economy (the sponsors, their funds, their deals, their portfolio companies, their exits) and own healthcare and life sciences as the sector where that capital is most concentrated and most heavily regulated. Everything else in the firm exists to serve those two.

That is why the comparison set is Kirkland & Ellis and Latham & Watkins rather than the Magic Circle. A Magic Circle firm sells breadth: it will do your bond issue, your competition defence and your shipping dispute. Ropes sells depth in one lane and prices accordingly.

THE NUMBER THAT SHOWS THE STRATEGY

Revenue per lawyer of roughly $2.5 million. That figure is what deliberate concentration looks like on a profit and loss account: high-value mandates, relatively few lawyers, no volume business. It is a more revealing statistic than the headline revenue, and almost no applicant will mention it.

London opened in 2010 on Ludgate Hill and is now the firm's second centre of gravity – described internally as the hub of a European private capital platform, not as a European full-service firm. London, Paris, Milan and Dublin are run as one European unit.

SECTION 02

Governance above a matrix

An elected Chair and a Management Committee sit above a matrix: practice groups run down, geographies run across, and industry teams cut through both. A mandate is not handed to a department — it pulls specialists out of five or six rows at once.

GOVERNANCE

PRACTICE GROUPS × GEOGRAPHY

	AMERICAS	EUROPE London · Paris · Milan · Dublin	ASIA
Private capital & M&A	●	●	●
Asset management & funds	●	●	●
Finance & restructuring	●	●	●
Tax · antitrust · regulatory	●	●	●
Litigation & enforcement	●	●	●

INDUSTRY TEAMS CUT ACROSS EVERY ROW

Healthcare & life sciences Technology Financial services Infrastructure Consumer

Firms tell you their strategy through who they promote. The vice chair, elected in 2024 for a term beginning January 2025, was previously co-head of the global private equity practice. The people setting firm strategy have sponsor-side instincts.

SECTION 03

How the firm actually makes money

The naive answer is "hourly rates on big deals". The real answer is that Ropes engineered its client base so a single sponsor relationship produces fees continuously for a decade, across five practice groups, whether or not the market is doing deals.

ONE SPONSOR CLIENT – BAIN CAPITAL, TPG, EQT, PARTNERS GROUP

Win the sponsor once and you are not on a deal – you are on an annuity that renews every vintage.

Note stage 5. When trade sales and IPOs slow, as they did through 2023–24, the exit fee does not disappear – it migrates to continuation vehicles and GP-led secondaries. A firm strong in both is hedged against the M&A cycle in a way a pure M&A shop is not. This is the single most useful thing to understand about Ropes.

SECTION 04

Where the $3.7 billion comes from

Ropes is a private partnership. It reports a top-line revenue figure and a profit-per-equity-partner figure to the legal press, and nothing else. It does not publish a practice-by-practice revenue breakdown, and neither does any comparable firm.

Report what is reported. You will find websites claiming precise splits such as "45% private equity, 25% life sciences". Those figures are not sourced to the firm. Quoting an invented statistic to a partner who knows the real number is the worst outcome available to you in an interview.

SAY THIS INSTEAD

"Ropes doesn't publish a practice split, but revenue per lawyer of around $2.5 million tells you it's running a concentrated, high-value model rather than a volume one." That is defensible, and it quietly signals that you understand what firms do and don't disclose.

SECTION 05

Where they are genuinely first-rank

Every firm claims every practice. These are the four where Ropes is at or near the top of the market, with the evidence attached.

PILLAR ONE

Private capital

- Buyouts, growth equity, take-privates
- Fund formation across buyout, credit, infrastructure and real assets
- Acquisition financing and private credit
- Clients include Bain Capital, TPG, Partners Group, EQT
- Private Capital Team of the Year, The Lawyer Awards 2026

PILLAR TWO

Secondaries

- Ranked #1 in Secondaries Investor's law firm survey
- Acts for 10 of the top 15 global secondaries buyers
- 600+ secondaries transactions in 2025 alone
- Continuation vehicles, GP-leds, LP portfolio sales, GP stakes
- The practice that made the firm cycle-resistant

PILLAR THREE

Registered funds

- Regular counsel to 2,000+ mutual funds, or their independent trustees
- Mutual funds, ETFs, closed-end, interval and tender-offer funds
- Fund counsel to PIMCO on 22 closed-end funds
- Jackson National multi-asset interval funds
- Section 36(b) fee litigation and SEC regulation

PILLAR FOUR

Healthcare & life sciences

- A sector vertical, not a side practice
- Biotech licensing and royalty monetisation
- FDA and MHRA regulatory work
- Healthcare buyouts and provider consolidation
- Hired a Chambers Band 1 life sciences regulatory partner into London, July 2026

WHY THE FOUR SIT TOGETHER

They are not four businesses; they are one. A sponsor raises a fund (pillar one), buys a healthcare asset that needs regulatory expertise to underwrite properly (pillar four), and eventually exits it into a continuation vehicle (pillar two) – while the same firm advises the registered-fund managers now buying into private assets (pillar three). Each pillar makes the others more valuable. That is what a genuinely integrated firm looks like, as opposed to one that has simply collected practices.

SECTION 06

Work you can actually point to Pick one and know it properly. A candidate who can explain why one deal happened beats a candidate who lists five.

MATTER	VALUE	ROLE	WHY IT MATTERS
EQT acquires Collier Capital Announced Jan 2026 · closing Q3 2026	$3.2bn + $500m earn-out	Advised EQT, with Vinge. Kirkland acted for Collier.	The largest acquisition of a secondaries manager ever done. Collier runs ~$49bn and becomes "Collier EQT", with Jeremy Collier still leading it. A blue-chip sponsor buying its way into the liquidity business.
Madison Dearborn / NFP sale to Aon	$13.4bn	Advised the sponsor and its portfolio company.	A textbook stage-5 exit: a sponsor-owned insurance broker sold to a strategic buyer. Shows the firm acting on both the sponsor and the asset side of the same relationship.
TPG Rise Fund / Outcomes First Group	UK	Advised TPG Rise on the acquisition from Stirling Square.	A London mandate for a US impact fund buying a UK specialist education provider. Sponsor-to-sponsor, cross-border, regulated sector — exactly what the London office was built for.
Secondaries programme Calendar year 2025	600+ deals	Buy-side and sell-side; 10 of the top 15 global buyers.	Volume, not one headline. This is the practice that kept revenue growing while M&A exits stalled — the clearest evidence that the firm's hedge actually works.
PIMCO closed-end fund platform	22 funds	Fund counsel, plus interval and open-end mandates.	The registered-funds side of the house: recurring regulatory and governance work with no deal cycle attached to it at all. The counterweight to transactional revenue.

THE ONE TO KNOW

EQT / Collier. It is the European platform, the secondaries franchise and the asset management M&A practice all producing a single mandate at the same time — and the firm won The Lawyer's Private Capital Team of the Year for it in June 2026. If you only prepare one matter, prepare this one, and be ready to say why EQT bought: liquidity, not origination, is the binding constraint in private markets right now.

SECTION 07

Standing where the industry is rebuilding itself

Most firms sit on one side of a wall. Either they do private funds – closed-end, illiquid, institutional money, ten-year lock-ups – or they do registered funds, where investors are retail and the regulation is about daily liquidity, fee levels and independent boards. Different skills, different regulators, different clients. Ropes is top-tier on both sides at once.

PRIVATE CAPITAL – UNREGISTERED wants retail

money

The convergence zone

Interval funds
Tender-offer funds
Evergreen / semi-liquid
Private credit BDCs
Retail-access feeders

needs BOTH skill sets to build

REGISTERED FUNDS – '40 ACT / UCITS

Money comes from
Retail savers, advisers, pension default funds

Wrapped in
Mutual funds, ETFs, daily NAV, independent boards, fee scrutiny

R&G: counsel to 2,000+ funds wants private returns

a semi-liquid wrapper around illiquid assets still needs a way out

Secondaries and continuation vehicles

the machinery that turns locked-up assets back into cash
R&G #1 · 600+ deals in 2025 · 10 of the top 15 buyers

Very few firms hold all three positions at once.

That is the argument for Ropes from an asset management seat – not that it is prestigious, but that it is standing exactly where the industry is currently rebuilding itself.

The wall is coming down. Private capital wants retail money because institutional allocations are near their ceiling. Retail platforms want private returns. The vehicles that join them need someone who understands both fund economics and the registered-fund rulebook – and they only function if there is a liquidity mechanism underneath.

SECTION 08 • THE DIFFERENTIATORS

Six things that are actually rare

Ranked by how few other firms could claim the same. Each one is a claim, the evidence for it, and why it is hard to copy.

01 Top-tier on both sides of the private / registered fund divide

Almost every competitor is a private funds firm or a registered funds firm. Ropes is both, at scale, just as the two worlds merge into evergreen and semi-liquid products.

Evidence: counsel to 2,000+ registered funds; simultaneously the #1-ranked secondaries practice. Hard to copy: you cannot lateral-hire a forty-year fund-board relationship.

02 Revenue that survives the deal cycle

Most elite transactional firms are a leveraged bet on M&A volume. Ropes built secondaries and restructuring alongside, so the same client list pays whichever way the cycle turns.

Evidence: 600+ secondaries deals in 2025; a new global restructuring chair hired with a four-partner team in 2026. Hard to copy: requires deliberately building capacity you hope not to use.

03 An information advantage over its own clients' market

The firm maintains a proprietary database of buyout fund terms. Because it papers so many funds, it sees where the market actually is on fees, hurdles, GP commitments and carry before LPs do.

Evidence: cited in Chambers commentary as "state-of-the-art technology". Hard to copy: it is a by-product of volume — you need the mandates first.

04 Client and firm are one talent pool

The firm hired EQT's general counsel into London as a partner. A former head of that same London office left to join Bain Capital. That traffic runs in both directions and it is unusual.

Evidence: Paul Dali, ex-GC of EQT, joined in 2026. Hard to copy: people only move like that where the relationship is already genuine.

05 A sector vertical deep enough to change the underwriting

Life sciences sits beside private capital because healthcare buyouts turn on things a generalist cannot price: patent cliffs, reimbursement policy, regulatory pathways.

Evidence: a Chambers UK 2026 Band 1 life sciences regulatory partner hired into London, July 2026. Hard to copy: sector credibility takes a decade.

06 Expansion that follows clients rather than flags

Fifteen years of London alone, then Paris and Milan inside six months — not to be a European full-service firm, but because sponsor clients were deploying there and referrals leak relationships.

Evidence: ten-lawyer team from Linklaters and eight-lawyer team from Latham into Paris, 2025–26. Hard to copy: restraint is harder than growth.

SECTION 09 • YOUR ANGLE

It is a relationship business wearing a law firm's clothes

If you are drawn to client-facing work, this is the section that matters. Ropes' economics only work because it holds relationships rather than winning transactions — and that is a structural fact about the firm, not a line from its brochure.

THE TRANSACTIONAL ADVISER — RE-WINS EVERY TIME

THE EMBEDDED ADVISER — THE ROPES MODEL

VALUE OF THE RELATIONSHIP OVER TIME

The difference is what happens after the deal closes. A transactional adviser re-enters a competition each time. An embedded adviser is already inside the next fund before it is raised. Ropes' whole cost structure — a matrix that lets five practices serve one client, offices opened where clients deploy — is built to produce the lower line, not the upper one.

Three mechanisms that make it compound

ONE • SWITCHING COSTS

By fund III the firm holds every precedent document, the fund's own negotiated positions, and the institutional memory of what the LPs asked for last time. Changing adviser means paying someone else to relearn it.

TWO • NO INTERNAL COMPETITION

The matrix on page 4 exists so five practices can serve one client without fighting over it. That is what lets a funds partner introduce a restructuring partner rather than guarding the relationship.

THREE • USEFULNESS BETWEEN MANDATES

The buyout fund terms database means the firm has something to say when there is no live deal. Advisers who only appear when they are billing are the ones who get re-tendered.

AND THE RISK

Concentration cuts both ways. A firm this tied to private capital is exposed if sponsors stop raising funds — which is precisely why secondaries and restructuring were built up alongside. Worth raising if a partner asks what you would worry about.

SECTION 10

How you can prove the relationship claim

Anyone can assert that a firm is "relationship-led" – it is on every law firm website in the world. The reason you can say it about Ropes and be believed is that there are four pieces of hard evidence, and almost no applicant will have found them.

A People move between firm and client

Ropes hired Paul Dali, formerly general counsel of EQT – a client – into London as a private equity partner in 2026. In the other direction, a former head of the London office left to join Bain Capital, another major client.

Why it proves the point: a general counsel only joins their outside counsel when they already know the firm from the inside. Careers do not cross that line where the relationship is purely commercial.

B The firm opens offices where clients deploy capital

Paris and Milan launched within six months of each other in 2025 – the first continental European offices after fifteen years of London alone. Four European private equity co-heads now meet weekly, in London.

Why it proves the point: the alternative was referring a French deal to a French firm. Referrals leak relationships. This is a defensive move to keep a client whole, not an ambition to be a European firm.

C It gives clients information, not just advice

The proprietary database of buyout fund terms lets the firm tell a sponsor where the market actually is on fees, hurdles and carry – before that information is public.

Why it proves the point: this is the classic relationship move in any advisory business. You become valuable between mandates by bringing something the client cannot get elsewhere.

D Lawyers go and sit inside the client

London runs client secondments – to Liberty Global among others – plus a three-month antitrust secondment to the Dublin office. Secondments are allocated when a client asks for one.

Why it proves the point: a client only asks for a seconded lawyer when they already treat the firm as an extension of their own team.

THE SENTENCE THIS EARNS YOU

"Ropes doesn't win deals so much as win sponsors – and the proof isn't in the marketing, it's that the firm hired EQT's general counsel while a former head of its London office left for Bain Capital. Adviser and client are effectively one community." Say that and you are no longer a candidate who has read a website.

SECTION 11 • READ THIS BEFORE THE EVENT

What "client-facing" honestly means here

One caution, because it will save you from the single most common mistake at an event like this. A trainee solicitor's first two years are not client-facing in the way a coverage, investor relations or sales role is. If you tell a partner you are drawn to Ropes because you want client contact from day one, they will know you have not understood the job. The relationship skill matters enormously – it just arrives on a different timetable, and it starts internally.

SEAT	WHAT A TRAINEE ACTUALLY DOES	CLIENT CONTACT
Private equity	Transaction management, tracker checklists, board minutes, portfolio company due diligence	Limited early on – the seat most trainees do, and the least client-facing at the start
Antitrust	Merger control research, drafting papers, liaising with counsel across offices	Direct. Trainees interact with clients and with opposing parties
Asset management	Regulatory and AML advice; fund marketing and jurisdictional applications	Advisory. The team's product is answering client questions
Finance	Checklist management, document amendments, basic drafting – "very process-heavy"	Low; the value is learning how deals are actually built
Real estate	PE real estate joint ventures and real estate finance	Significant international exposure and responsibility

Where relationship skill actually shows up early

This is the more interesting point, and it is well evidenced. At Ropes, internal relationships are the mechanism for almost everything that determines your career there.

SEAT ALLOCATION Informal. Trainees rank preferences in conversation with graduate recruitment. One trainee's summary: "The onus is on you to reach out to people informally."	QUALIFICATION Typically no formal interview unless a department is oversubscribed – it happens through conversations with teams, partners and associates. The firm retained all qualifiers in 2025.
SUPERVISION Trainees share an office with a supervising associate who volunteered for the role. Proximity, not process, is how the learning happens.	PRO BONO A 20-hour annual target, with a family law clinic in East London. One trainee: "they do trust you to run with it." Often the first matter where you are the one the client speaks to.

SAY IT THIS WAY INSTEAD

Not "I want client contact early." Instead: "I'm interested in the part of this job where you understand a client's business well enough to be useful before you're asked – and I know that starts with being the person in the team who is trusted with the relationship internally first." That shows you understand the trajectory rather than romanticising it.

SECTION 12

What they have been doing, and why

Ropes had London for fifteen years and nothing else in Europe. Then, in roughly eighteen months, it built a continental platform. Every move has a reason.

2010	London opens Ludgate Hill. The bridgehead for European private capital work, and for fifteen years the only European office.
Jan 2025	Neill Jakobe becomes vice chair Elected 2024 for a five-year term. Previously co-head of the global private equity practice. Why: the firm put its private equity leadership into the governance tier. Strategy is now set by people with sponsor-side instincts.
2025	Paris and Milan launch within six months The first continental offices. A ten-lawyer private funds and tax team arrived from Linklaters; an eight-lawyer M&A and private equity team from Latham & Watkins. Why: follow the client, not the flag. Referring a French or Italian deal to a local firm leaks the relationship. Defensive as much as expansionary.
2025–26	Cataldo Piccarreta joins as co-head of European PE transactions From Latham. Four co-heads now run European private equity and meet weekly – in London. Why: London is being run as the hub of one European platform, with Paris, Milan and Dublin as spokes, rather than four independent offices.
2026	Paul Dali joins London from EQT Formerly general counsel of EQT – a client – now a private equity partner. Why: hiring a sponsor's own GC says how close the relationship is. Traffic runs both ways: a former head of the London office left for Bain Capital.
Jan 2026	EQT / Collier Capital $3.2bn plus a $500m earn-out; the largest secondaries manager acquisition on record. Ropes advised EQT with Vinge. Why it is the deal to know: the European platform, the secondaries franchise and asset management M&A producing one mandate at once. Private Capital Team of the Year, June 2026.
Jun–Sep 2026	Continued hiring into the strategy Peter Rosen into New York for global secondaries. Alison Dennis, Chambers UK 2026 Band 1 for life sciences regulatory, into London in July. A new global restructuring chair with a four-partner New York team. A new firm general counsel in September. Why restructuring matters: it is the hedge. If leveraged portfolio companies come under pressure, the same client list generates restructuring fees instead of deal fees.

THE STRATEGY IN ONE SENTENCE

12 Ropes is not trying to become a European full-service firm. It is building a narrow, deep private capital platform across London, Paris, Milan and Dublin so a sponsor client never has to instruct anyone else – and adding secondaries and restructuring so the revenue survives whichever way the cycle turns.

SECTION 13

Two drafted answers

Q. Why does Ropes & Gray appeal to you and what do you hope to gain from attending this masterclass? (150–200 words)

VERSION B – RELATIONSHIP-LED • RECOMMENDED

173 words

Ropes & Gray appeals to me because of how it makes money. It doesn't win deals so much as win sponsors, and then earns from one relationship for a decade – raising the fund, doing the buyout, financing it, holding it, and building the exit. That model only works if the relationships are genuinely deep, and the evidence is that they are: the firm hired EQT's general counsel into its London office, and a former head of that office left to join Bain Capital. Adviser and client are effectively one community.

That is the part of professional services I want to work in. I am drawn to the client-facing side – being the person who understands a client's business well enough to be useful before being asked – and Ropes is unusual in that its strategy is built on exactly that, rather than on scale.

From the masterclass I want to hear from trainees how early that client contact really begins, which seats offer it, and to get honest feedback on my application before the deadline.

VERSION A – ASSET-MANAGEMENT-LED

176 words

Ropes & Gray appeals to me because it chose depth over breadth. Rather than covering everything, it built around private capital and life sciences, and that focus shows in the work.

What interests me most, coming from an asset management angle, is that the firm sits on both sides of a line most firms only cross once. It is regular counsel to more than 2,000 registered funds or their independent trustees, while running the market's leading secondaries practice, advising ten of the fifteen largest global buyers. Those two worlds are converging through evergreen and interval structures, and Ropes is already positioned where that happens. Advising EQT on its acquisition of Collier Capital is the clearest example: a sponsor buying a secondaries manager because liquidity, not origination, is now the binding constraint in private markets.

From the masterclass I want to test that reading against people who do the work – to hear from trainees how the funds, transactional and regulatory teams genuinely share one sponsor client, and to get direct feedback on my application before I submit.

WHICH TO SEND, AND WHAT TO CHECK

Send Version B. It answers "why us" with something about the firm's actual business model rather than its reputation, it carries evidence nobody else will have, and it matches the career interest you actually have. You have roughly 27 words of headroom – the best use is one sentence in paragraph two naming something you have genuinely done that involved holding a relationship.

Before submitting: re-verify the Collier figures on the firm's newsroom if you use Version A (announced January 2026, due to close Q3 2026, so "acquiring" may need to become "acquired"), and confirm your minimum five hours with SEO London are logged. That is a hard eligibility gate independent of the answer.

SECTION 14

Questions, and how to follow up

The day runs 10:00–15:30 and includes a trainee Q&A, an application workshop, a diversity panel and a negotiation exercise. These four questions are answerable, non-obvious, and signal that you did the reading.

- 01 Now that London, Paris and Milan run as one platform, does a trainee get staffed on European deals, or does the seat system keep you in London work?

Tests whether the platform strategy reaches the bottom of the firm. Trainees will have a real answer.

- 02 Is there a funds seat in the London rotation, and do trainees see continuation vehicle work, or does that sit mainly with the US offices?

Shows you know the practice map, and it is genuinely useful information for you.

- 03 With so much growth coming from lateral partner hires rather than internal promotion, how does that change what it's like to be an associate here?

A real question about the strategy's cost. Ask it neutrally, not as a challenge.

- 04 Does the firm expect the retail push into private markets to become a meaningful part of the London practice, or does that stay a US registered-funds story?

The asset management question. Connects your interest to their business, and very few candidates will ask it.

THE NEGOTIATION EXERCISE

Worth knowing what the firm's own negotiators actually do. In a fund formation context the negotiation is GP against LP over management fees, hurdle rates, key-person clauses and side letters – not a haggle over price. If the exercise is transactional, the same instinct applies: look for the terms that allocate risk, not just the number. Candidates who chase price look junior; candidates who ask "who carries this if it goes wrong" look trained.

IF RELATIONSHIPS ARE YOUR ANGLE, BEHAVE LIKE IT ON THE DAY

You are attending an event about relationship-building, so the event is itself the test. Three practical things:

One. Get two or three names, not ten business cards. Depth beats coverage, which is the same argument the firm makes about itself.

Two. Ask a trainee what they were doing last week. It is a better question than "what's the culture like", it gets a real answer, and it gives you something specific to reference later.

Three. Follow up within 48 hours with something useful rather than something grateful – a short note referencing the specific thing they told you. That is the actual skill being tested, and it is the one most candidates skip.

SECTION 15

Sources and caveats

READ THIS BEFORE QUOTING ANYTHING

Everything here is compiled from public reporting as at 10 September 2026. Three specific cautions:

1. No practice-level revenue split exists. Ropes publishes revenue and profit per equity partner and nothing more. The Panel B bars on page 6 are inferred and deliberately drawn without an axis. Do not quote a percentage.

2. Trainee pay and retention figures differ between sources and cohorts. Legal Cheek's current profile gives £62,000 and £67,000 for the two trainee years with an NQ rate of £170,000; the Chambers Student guide reports £60,000, £65,000 and £165,000 from an earlier cycle. Retention is reported at 75% in one place and as all qualifiers retained in 2025 in another. Quote a range, or don't quote it.

3. The EQT / Coller deal was still closing. Announced 22 January 2026 at $3.2bn plus up to $500m earn-out, expected to close Q3 2026. Check the tense before you write about it.

Where each thing came from

SOURCE	USED FOR
Legal Cheek – firm profile	FY2025 revenue, PEP, revenue per lawyer, headcount, offices, London trainee numbers and salaries
Legal Business – European PE expansion	Paris and Milan launches, the four European PE co-heads, London as hub
The Global Legal Post	Latham and Linklaters Paris team hires; the London head's move to Bain Capital
Law360 and EQT press release	Coller Capital deal value, structure, earn-out, AUM, timetable and advisers
Ropes & Gray newsroom	Alison Dennis and Peter Rosen hires, The Lawyer award, the firm's own market commentary
Chambers and Legal 500	Practice rankings, the buyout fund terms database, registered funds client detail, PIMCO mandate
Secondaries Investor	#1 ranking, 600+ 2025 transactions, 10 of the top 15 buyers
Chambers Student – True Picture	Seat structure, what trainees do by seat, client contact, secondments, seat allocation and qualification

Prepared for the Ropes & Gray Masterclass application, SEO London, deadline Thursday 17 September 2026 at 12:00. Point of contact: corporatelaw@seo-london.org. This document is a research aid – the judgements in it are arguments to test at the event, not facts to recite.